

I THINK MY CHILD IS INTUITIVE!

NOW WHAT DO I DO?

©2022, A Place of Light, Inc.

I was reading in the front room when my four-year-old son came to me saying, “I just finished talking to the nicest man.”

Since we were the only two physical people in the apartment, I asked if he knew who he was, and he told me “No, but he said to tell you he was sorry he never got to tell you good bye.”

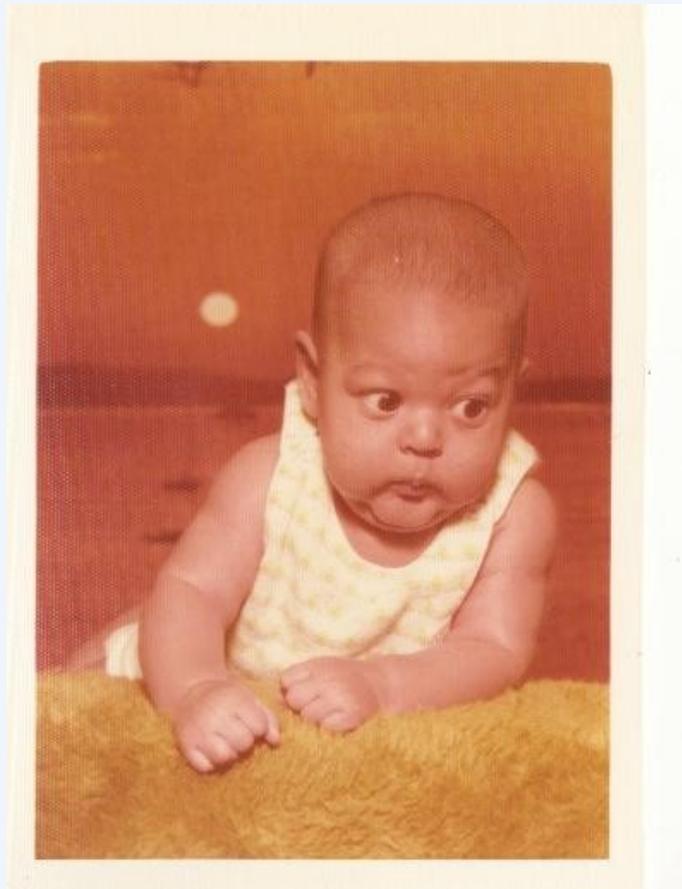

I asked him if he could describe the man to me and he again said, “no, but I know where there’s a picture.” With that, he led me to a picture of my father who had passed when I was 13 after lapsing into a coma before I could make one final visit to him. The message eased years of sorrow for me.

I was a single parent, so my son had no concept of father; nor had I ever mentioned anything about who was in the picture I had hanging in the room.

I tell this story because this is the kind of insight and comfort we can gain if we pay attention to and honor our children’s intuitive knowings.

SIGNS PREVERBAL CHILDREN ARE INTUITIVE

- Tracking “unseen” things on the wall, ceiling or in the air
- Paying close attention to a particular point in the room where nothing physical seems to be present
- Having a strong reaction to a particular person or place without apparent cause
- Chatting/babbling when no one seems to be around
- Looking carefully at another person or deeply looking into their eyes.

INTERACTING WITH PREVERBAL CHILDREN

Remember that preverbal children have what we call receptive language. This means they understand a great deal of what is being said. After all, children can communicate through sign language as young as six months old.

This means you can begin to encourage your child from the very beginning to trust their abilities.

THINGS YOU CAN SAY

- You seeing those orbs all around us? That's great!
- Who's got your attention over there? I am glad you can see them!
- Wow, you really don't want to be here, do you? We will leave then.
- I am so glad you have someone to talk to!
- That's good you are paying close attention like that.

SCHOOL AGE CHILDREN'S COMMON EXPERIENCES

As the child grows older and the body becomes capable of speech and more social interaction, s/he may

- tell you about spirit friends,
- report seeing family members who are on the other side, or
- make insightful comments about people s/he sees or knows.

INTERACTING WITH YOUNG CHILDREN

- Show an interest in their spirit friends, asking their names and what they are wearing.
- Ask if the family member has a message or if they are just visiting. You can also ask the family member questions through your child.
- Show appreciation for the wisdom and insights offered by the child, but also make sure they are showing good manners and not blurting out things like “that woman has ugly colors around her.”

ADULT COMMENTS THAT MAKE CHILDREN SHUT DOWN

- How do you know that?
- I do not see anyone. You must be imagining things.
- That's really creepy/weird/freaky.
- That's just your imagination.
- Stop making up things.
- She's always saying weird things like that (you talking to someone else).
- I don't understand how you do that.
- Show them how you can _____. (name an ability)
- I don't believe you.
- You do the strangest things.

I hope you get the idea from the list above. Never ask your child to show off, never make them feel what they are doing is special or make a big fuss over it (it is totally normal and everyone can do it), and never show doubt about what they tell you.

Instead, normalize the experience as the wonderful expression of life it is.

WE'RE JUST SCRATCHING THE SURFACE HERE

What is contained in this short ebook is only a bare beginning of what can be done to embrace and encourage your intuitive child.

There are many situations where a child requires special guidance, which is beyond the scope of this publication.

However, if you just do what is in here, you'll go a long ways to help your child embrace a way of life that includes intuitive knowings. By learning at an early age to trust these insights, your child will have a consistent source of correct guidance and insight that will make life so much easier.
